Course Description:

This course intends to provide a conceptual framework of why financial institutions exist and how they function. In addition, the course intends to shed light on what various services those institutions offer. In describing each type of institution, the course emphasizes how financial institutions participate in financial markets. The course also provides complete exposition on financial institutions management, performance, and regulatory aspects. It will also analyze how financial institutions manage, absorb and control the risk they face. The objective of this course is enriching the students' knowledge with the practical aspects of financial institutions management which should serve a noble objective of enhancing the student's learning process.

This is not a "how to" course. This is a "why do" course. By way of analogy, think of the set of plans for a building. Both an architect and a draftsman can read the plans and even copy the plans with minor changes. But an architect can do more than a draftsman can do. When it is time to design a completely new building that responds creatively to the needs of the client and the context of the built and natural environment, you want an architect. I am here to train financial architects—not draftsmen. Please do not expect to learn a cookbook of formulas that you plug numbers into. (Now that we have macros in Excel, no one will pay a salary for that skill.) Expect to learn a few simple, but powerful, intuitions and be able to apply them creatively to a variety of new situations. Finance is such a rapidly changing area that you would be poorly served with a set of rote formulae—such knowledge would be rapidly obsolete.
